

Published based on Weimaraner Training: Eight Housebreaking Ideas

Weimaraner Training: Eight Housebreaking Ideas

One of the most important responsibilities of every weimaraner owner is to learn more about the breed including weimaraner training. As early as eight weeks of age, puppies ought to undergo socialization, basic obedience training and housebreaking. These three areas of training are very important in raising a well-behaved pet everybody loves to be around.

There's nothing more fulfilling than having a dog that poops and pees at the right time and place. You'll never have to worry about urine stains on the carpet or seeing a pile of poop beside the couch. With a housebroken canine, you can be at ease permitting him to roam around the house knowing that he is aware of what to do when the urge to urinate or defecate occurs.

Here are eight tips that will help you housebreak your dog effectively:

Understand your pet's condition.

When you brought home a puppy, be aware that puppies are incapable of holding their bladder for longer periods of time thus the need to relieve frequently. The same may be true to dogs with any kind of kidney and urinary disease. By knowing your pet's condition, you will be able to determine what works best for your pet.

Keep watch over your dog.

Whether you brought home a puppy or an adult dog, experts always suggest to keep track of him particularly during your pooch's first few days at home in which he is more likely to feel strange at the new atmosphere you brought him into. Additionally, you need to;

Watch out for signs.

Dogs always exhibit clues before they go potty. These signs include sniffing around, walking in circles and being too restless. When these signs show up, you need to bring your dog to the area you chose as his toilet instantly and let him finish there.

Establish feeding routine.

If you feed your four-legged friends almost at the same time daily, he's also more likely to potty almost the same times too.

Bring him out on regular basis.

The best times to take your dog out are during; upon waking up in the morning, after eating or drinking, after exercise and other strenuous activities, before going to bed at night as well as when he is nervous or excited. By doing this on regular basis, he is more likely to develop such routine that will make housebreaking during weimaraner training easy.

Train him how to let you know when he want to relieve himself.

This may appear tricky but it is not impossible at all. Teaching him to ring the bell at the door when he needs to go out and eliminate can make life as a pet owner easier.

Avoid bringing him inside instantly.

Bringing him back inside right after doing his business will make him assume that once the deed is done, great time outside ends thus he'll delay as much as possible. Playing with him after potty will motivate him to complete his business immediately so that he can have fun with you.

Give rewards.

Reward your dog whenever he urinates or defecates at the area you specified. Through this, he'll be able to figure out that he gets good things for doing such behavior thus will repeat the behavior once again. Reward could be treats, time to play or praise.

You can also find this article published on Weimaraner Training: Eight Housebreaking Ideas, and on the tag pages basic obedience training, four legged friends, Home, Time, urine stains, Weimaraner.